Emergency Measures

Postage Stamps-Civil War Tokens-Fractional Currency

With the start of the Civil War and the banks stopping specie payments (no more coins for paper money), the hoarding of coins started. There soon was no change to make change!

Stamps that were used to make change became unusable, by sticking together and just falling apart. To help solve this, some put stamps into small envelopes (72 x 36mm). They had the amount of the stamps inside on the envelope. Many had advertising on them. The amounts went from 10 cents up to 1 dollar. Today most are just the front panels of the envelopes which are still rare. Complete envelopes are very rare to unique!

On August 12th 1862, John Gault got a U.S. patent to "Encase" postage stamps within a round brass holder that had a thin layer of clear mica over the face of the stamp to protect it, and you could still see the stamp. To make a profit Gault sold advertising on the back. Thirty four different merchants bought advertising. All of these are very scarce to very rare. This was too little too late. In September of 1862 postage currency started to be issued to the public.

By the spring of 1863 postage currency had replaced most of the makeshift change. Some private issue of Fractional Paper was still out there, but it was only good locally, in that city or at the merchant only. These would be stopped by the law of April 22, 1864. The one coin that postage currency had not replaced was the cent, which was important in everyday use. Many merchants were driven to find a circulating medium for the cent. Tokens the size of our current cent made mostly of copper were the answer. They were known in those days as "Copper Heads" and today as "Civil War Tokens". They were readily accepted as a 1 cent coin everywhere. There are two principal types, the "Store Cards" and the "Patriotic Tokens"!

The Patriotic Tokens had a Patriotic theme like "Army & Navy", "Union Forever", etc. The Store Card type carried the name and the address of a business (a store), on one side, and an advertising message on the other. The making of the tokens was profitable, for one cents worth of material produced five one cent tokens. Some 396 towns in 23 states produced Civil War Tokens. There have been about 11,000 varieties of Civil War Tokens identified.

Out of all those only one said anything on it about postage or fractional currency. That rare token is "The New York Store" in Waterbury Connecticut on one side. The other side says, "Redeemable in Sums of 5 cents or more Postage Currency".

The law of April 22, 1864 prohibited individuals or any cities from issuing or passing, any paper, coins, or tokens etc. in any way as money of any kind. This law saw the end to Civil War Token production. They circulated for just about another year till the end of the Civil War.

Fractional Currency would still be issued and circulated for many years later. Even after the law of April 17, 1876 that directed fractionals be redeemed with silver coins. A total of $368,724,079.45 of Postage and Fractional Currency was issued which helped pay for the Civil War! The last official government estimate was 1925 when they said that just $5,000,000 was still outstanding. That's less than 1 1/2% of the total issued. So how much can be left today?

Enjoy your notes!
